However, because he wanted to focus upon Roman interactions with Persia as part of a wider effort to demonstrate that God had abandoned the contemporary Romans and made use of the Persians as a divine scourge, Isidore had to deepen his coverage of Roman-Persian interaction in the past. Wood, Eutropius and Festus were far more useful in pursuing that aim, since they had been specifically written to encourage Roman aggression against Persia under the Emperor Valens. Military were preferred to Christian historians simply because they were more useful. Main article: Slavery in Poland. Check-in date. Michael Gunder.
